Solving a Healthcare Challenge

With traditional ceramic tiles used in wet environments, porous grout can absorb excess moisture and harbor bacteria, leading to mold and mildew beneath the surface over time. These tiles are also subject to cracking, chipping and breaking as they gradually wear down or from heavy impact. As a result, extensive scrubbing, water ingress and repair issues can become a recurring problem.

Solution

Responding to customer requests and recent trends in delivering more home-like experiences, Altro brought a realistic tile look to their already hygienic Whiterock range. Altro Tegulis possesses the same durability and water resistance as Altro Whiterock wall cladding, allowing it to endure frequent cleaning and disinfecting as well as heavy impact. By etching grout lines in many different styles on a wide palette of colors, Altro Tegulis provides an authentic, residential-looking tile without the drawbacks that come with traditional ceramic tile.

Evaluation and Success

Altro Tegulis has already been installed in a number of projects and they perform beautifully. The concept of the product is based on technology that has been trusted in the most critical of healthcare environments. Altro's hygienic wall panels have been leading the market for almost 40 years; now they are delivering the same peak performance, just with a more home-like aesthetic.

Altro Tegulis can be used in all types of healthcare settings, not just hospitals and senior care communities. Moreover, this product has a sophisticated, chic look that is also suitable for more residential applications like multi-unit residential developments, retirement apartments or in home adaptations. The trend of living in place is continuing to grow and products like this will support that.
